PUGILISTIC WORLD WILL SOON BE CLEAR OF NEGROES

Langford's Star is on the Walter Donnette Bill in Mass. and Years in Washington, D.C. on Johnson.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—A few cent. more and the negro race that has assumed such an important position in the pugilistic world for more than half a century will have skidded off into obscurity.

Just a few years ago the negroes were the main attraction in the sport. Jack Johnson was champion and Langford was runner-up and Joe Donnette stood hand and shoulders over most of the world's champions. But now the word pugilistic ranks new as a high-bred, and Johnson alone holds his prime place. That added years to his skill, but he has not lost his source of inspiration. He must triumph, and when he does he will go down with a loud splash.

There are no longer negro light-weights to-day. When the wonderful Joe Gans boxed on and down it left his race without a representative.

fighters in the middleweight division and one of the best heavyweight fighters in the world. The two men were the greatest fighter in the light eight divisions has boomed up again out Chicago they think that battling Nelson deserves the vote. The old-time fighter, who was known as Joe Gans. The rank and file of Chicago think that the title should be given to one or the other—that no other lightweight measures up to them. Gans and Nelson were totally different in their style of fighting. One was a scientific boxer, a scientific man that ever stepped into the ring. He depended more on his wonderful brain, his amazing speed, his marvelous defense and generalship than he did on a punch. Nelson, on the other hand, probably was the most ungraceful citizen that ever held any kind of a pugilistic title. But how he could hit! And the punishment he could take. Nelson time time

His opponent that had enough force to knock out ninety-nine out of 100 men. But knew nothing about science. He had no footwork, and his defense, for the most part, was a joke. But he possessed the power to assimilate a terrible amount of punishment and still save enough energy to slip over a finish punch.
